29th SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

Isaiah 45:1, 4-6; Psalm 96:1, 3-5, 7-10;

1 Thessalonians 1:1-5; Matthew 22:15-21

THE LORD GOD IS KING

In today's Responsorial Psalm, we sing, "The Lord is King, and he governs the people [of the earth] with equity!". Empires, nations, and governments rise and fall throughout world history, but no earthly nation or ruler can come to power without God granting that ruler or nation authority. Sometimes even hard-hearted men receive that authority, becoming God's instrument to reveal His power, as in the Egyptian Pharaoh of the Exodus. At other times, invading armies became instruments of redemptive judgment on apostate and unrepentant covenant people, as in the armies and nations of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Greeks, and Romans.

However, at other times an earthly ruler can become God's instrument of salvation. This is what God announces through His prophet Isaiah concerning Cyrus, the pagan king of Persia, in the First Reading. Isaiah foretells the appointment of a man named Cyrus, a name in Persian meaning "shepherd," to accomplish the will of God, beginning with the redemption of God's people from the Babylonian captivity. As God's vehicle for good, King Cyrus not only restored the covenant people of Israel/Judah to their homeland after the years of the Babylonian exile, but he commissioned the rebuilding of the Temple of Solomon that the Babylonians destroyed. King Cyrus of Persia historically fulfilled his divinely appointed destiny, and he is the only Gentile in the Bible to be called God's Messiah. In the Second Reading, Saint Paul tells the Thessalonian Christians that they can fulfill the destiny for which God created them by becoming images of Christ and instruments of God's love and peace. Saint Paul preaches that our Christian virtues are found in the labors/works of love we offer when we live in the image of Jesus Christ and continue His earthly ministry. Our works of love and charity joined with the righteous deeds of others within the Christian community give vitality to Jesus' Kingdom of the Church whose members, as Saint Paul reminds us, are divinely elected by God. In the Gospel Reading, when confronted by the religious and civil leaders concerning the payment of the Roman Emperor's tax, Jesus makes the point that God has authority over all men, even kings. While the Roman coin used to pay the tax had the image of the Roman emperor on its face, God created the emperor, and he bears the image of his Creator. Therefore, like all human beings, the emperor is subject to Yahweh's sovereignty as the Divine King over his life.
